

NEWSPOINTS

October 31, 2019

On Oct. 18-20, experts came to equip the membership of the Manitoba-Saskatchewan Conference in the practical details of running a health ministry. The training course is offered by the NAD Health Ministries Department. This training provided practical tips on how to bring together all the pieces available at the conference and local church level in order to have a power-filled health ministry. MORE

It Is Written, a media evangelism ministry of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, will host a grand opening of its new ministry headquarters in Collegedale, Tenn., on Friday, Nov. 22, from 12 to 3 p.m. The event will feature a dedication, a ribbon cutting, an open house, ministry tours, giveaways, and refreshments. As NAD vice president for Multilingual Ministries, Tony Anobile works with 15 different language groups — and counting. But he wasn't always in multilingual ministry. In fact, the majority of his time serving the church, almost 34 years, has been in youth ministry. CLICK HERE to read this interview.

The 2019 North American Division Year-End Meeting starts this week, on Oct. 31, and goes through Nov. 5. Curtain Maker, Or Light Control Company?

“If you’re in an industry of making curtains, do you want to define yourself as a curtain-maker; or do you want to define yourself as a light control company where, as the technology moves on, [you're] putting liquid crystals inside glass and having a remote that turns clear glass into dark, opaque class? If you define yourself as just a curtain-maker, you are stuck with just making curtains, and when curtains are not in fashion anymore you're [finished]. It's extremely important to rebrand yourself into something much longer term. . . . Be future-proof."

— Daryl Gungadoo, Adventist Review Ministries Media Lab director, during the keynote address at the Society of Adventist Communicators convention on Oct. 18, 2019
